

THINKS MR. CLAUDE AS PRESIDENT

Gov. Colquitt of Texas, Incensed by Tolerated Anarchy in Mexico, Says President is Undemocratic and Un-American in Policy Declares Administration "Has Weakly Submitted to England and Betrayed the Cotton Growers of the Southern States"

By O. B. COLQUITT.

Governor of Texas.

By telegraph to the editor of the Boston American.

HONOLULU, Dec. 26.—The Wilson administration has been the greatest failure in the history of the presidency.

The South is a land literally flowing with milk and honey. It has made one of the biggest and best crops in its history and yet, because of the utter incompetency in charge of the government its business is prostrated, its credit is impaired and thousands of its people are starving.

The administration's tariff law was pledged to lower the cost of living and it has had the contrary effect. By putting raw material on the free list and keeping the protective tariff on manufactured goods, it has condemned American farmers by hundreds of thousands to penury and has enabled the manufacturers, getting their raw materials cheaper, to charge higher prices for their goods, which they fling down.

PRODUCERS ARE HOBLED.

Prices were lifted and shoves have gone higher. It is true of virtually every single item similarly treated in the administration tariff law.

The American farmer gets less for his raw materials, the American workman pays more for finished products, and both are robbed to further enrich the protected manufacturers and consumers.

The administration's foreign policy has been imbecile. It has allowed England to dictate conditions as to cotton shipments to European countries that enabled English spinners to rob the American cotton growers of half the value of their crop.

England stopped American shipments until the English spinners had bought their supply at 45 cents a pound and stored it in Texas and other Southern warehouses.

Then England consented to place cotton not contraband, and France followed suit a day or two later.

The government weakly submitted to England's dictate, playing into the hands of the English spinners and enabling the American cotton growers as completely as if the South were an English vassal state.

If I had been president I would have served notice on England's premier that our foreign trade in cotton and other non-contraband commodities was going forward with or without England's consent, and if necessary, I would have sent American troops to blockade England's door to enforce that notice.

SURRENDERS TO ENGLAND.

The administration's report of the Mexican Canal toll exemption law in violation of the party's national platform, was another weak surrender to England.

It free tolls for American ships that had not repeated hundreds of American-owned ships flying a foreign flag would have come under the American flag to get the benefit of the exemption and we would have had an American marine corps to carry our goods to foreign markets.

We have no merchant marine, and to supply it, the Wilson administration is proposing to spend the taxpayer's money buying a subsidized national shipping service.

The Wilson-Bryan management of the Mexican affair has been another gross failure. They lured an American army in Vera Cruz to force Huerta to salute the flag and have brought it back without getting the salute.

They now ask Congress to appropriate five hundred thousand dollars to pay the expenses of the Mexican expedition. For what? What did it accomplish?

It cost Mexico more than $100,000,000, and the situation that the Wilson-Bryan administration has brought about is such that it is impossible to see how it can be corrected.

Alimony for Mrs. Wheeler Husband Now Free to Sue

MRS. ALBERT GALLATIN WHEELER, JR.

Former Claudia Carlstedt, Boston Actress, Wins Back Payments of $2,750.

Mrs. Albert Gallatin Wheeler, Jr., of New York and Chicago, formerly Mrs. Claudia Carlstedt, the Boston actress, obtained $2,750 back alimony from her husband in New York yesterday, but, in so doing, she opens the way for Wheeler to press his suit for divorce.

Boston will recall vividly the return to this city last April of the brilliant Mrs. Wheeler and the four wives which she declared were next to her heart. The four wives she listed were:

First—An absolute divorce from Wheeler.

Second—A new husband.

Third—Children to the number of six boys and four girls.

Fourth—To be free from chaperones.

Mrs. Wheeler has been called "the best dressed woman in America" for her elaborate gown.

She has also been styled "The Girl in the Red Tights," a title which harks back to her striking costume in the Broadway production of "The Mandarin" before she married Wheeler.

She was born Claudia Carlstedt, daughter of Axel Carlstedt, who was director of the New England Conservatory of Music for many years.

At sixteen years she was married, but soon divorced her first husband in Chicago. She resumed her maiden name and went on the stage.

In May, 1905, Claudia was living in New York with her mother and was playing in "The Ideal Spy." She met Albert Gallatin Wheeler, Jr., son of the capitalist who financed the Chicago subway corporation.

The bride left the stage, entered society and enjoyed life with her husband with a town house in New York and a country home in Connecticut. This continued twelve years.

Three years ago Mrs. Wheeler sued for separation degree. She was awarded $6,000 a year alimony, but petitioned to have it raised to $10,000, with the result that it was changed down to $2,600. That was in the Spring of 1912.

A month ago Wheeler filed suit for divorce, alleging misconduct against his wife. Mrs. Wheeler promptly denied the charge. She also had her lawyers serve an injunction against all the divorce proceedings, pending a settlement of her alimony suit.

DEFERRED DAY AFTER COLDEST DEC. 26 YEARS

Death Follows in Wake of Extreme Cold; Higher Temperature with Moderate Winds Is Promised by the Weather Man

OFFICIAL FORECAST.

Fair today and Monday; slowly rising temperature, moderate variable winds.

The Weather Man has promised slightly warmer weather for Monday's Sabbath, but he didn't seem to say hurry about it last night.

The record cold of yesterday—down to 2 below zero at 2 a. m.—gave way slowly before the sun, until the temperature reached a maximum for the day of 13 above at 2 p. m.

Then the mercury slid back again with the sun and, when the sun dropped out of sight, the mercury fell to be trying the same thing.

It fell until it was down to 4 above zero at 10 p. m. This was within two degrees as cold as the breakfast reading—which hadn't been equalled on December 26 in Boston for forty-two years.

Nevertheless, the Weather Man stuck to his homework. He gave out the forecast as above.

Boston's story of record cold was repeated to greater or less degree east of the Mississippi River. The official medal for real cold weather seems to go to Harris, Va., with a reading of fifty-two degrees below zero. But a black-snowing blow up in New York named Lake Umbagog sent out an unofficial report of fifty-five degrees below, which was about the kind of weather one would expect of a place of that name.

The Boston mercury was 6 above at midnight Christmas. It fell to 2 below by 2 a. m., then climbed slowly up to 13 degrees above zero by 3 p. m. Snowing brought its slowly descending temperature and the mercury was down to 2 above at 9 p. m.

Suburban temperatures ranged from zero down to 13 below at Hingham. Further afield the readings told of a cold, such as 19 below at Marlboro, 17 below at Manchester, N. H., 12 below at Pittsfield, N. H., and 10 below at Northfield, Vt., and 22 below at the Myopia Hunt Club's grounds in wealth-favored Hamilton.

Crocodiles did the expected thing with readings like 15 below at White River, in below at Stoneville, 23 below at Northfield, Vt., and 22 below at the Myopia Hunt Club's grounds in wealth-favored Hamilton.

The cold wave caused some losses in the stock market. But not so many deaths from cold and exposure, nor as many severe cases of pneumonia, as were reported as might have been expected in this and slow-rising through old age. He looked about thirty-five.

Cold Snap Brings Out Boston's First Man With a Muff

The cold wave brought out Boston's first masculine muff wearer of the season. He strolled down Washington street just before banking hours yesterday. He wore a seal-skin cap, a dark gray topcoat of English cut and a dark suit. His hands were snugly thrust into a big black muff, such as Mother or Aunt Jane or Sister Sue at your best might carry.

Stares of pedestrians were the least of the muff-man's troubles. He was as nonchalant as the muff. Nor did he wear the muff because his hands were cold. He looked about thirty-five.

Queen of Italy Has Her Fifth Child

ROME, Dec. 25.—A daughter was born to the Queen today. This is Queen Helena's fifth child. Four of them are girls. The Crown Prince, Humbert, was born in 1898.

The Queen will shortly celebrate her forty-second birthday. She was married to King Humbert, the Prince of Naples, in 1896. The union has always been regarded as a royal love match.

TENNESSEE AND NORTH CAROLINA SENT TO TRIPOLI

Cruisers to Protect American Lives and Property Imperilled in Syria; Secretary Daniels Asks Full Details of the Riots

LONDON, Dec. 26.—It is officially announced by the Russian government that the Germans have failed in their attempt to break the Russian center in front of Warsaw.

The expectation in this city is that Field Marshal Von Hindenburg must order a retreat or find himself in the situation that ruined Napoleon in 1812.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—Secretary of the Navy Daniels today ordered the cruisers Tennessee and North Carolina to take care of American lives and property which are threatened at Tripoli in Syria, forty miles north of Beirut, where the two cruisers now are.

Secretary Daniels said today that he had nothing except press reports on which to act.

"I have, however," he said, asked the commanders of these vessels to co-operate with Ambassador Morgenthau. Under the naval regulations they have much discretion, but they have been instructed nevertheless, to exercise the utmost care in their actions, but always with a view to the protection of American interests."

Secretary Daniels has asked Captain Ouan of the North Carolina and Captain Decker of the Tennessee to report the exact facts. He has sent them substantially the press reports of today indicating trouble at Tripoli.

At that town the Turks are said to have attacked refugees, British, French and American, who were leaving Syria. It was also stated in the dispatches that "a warship" threatened to bombard Tripoli and that the warship protected the refugee ship and escorted it to Dardanelles in Turkey."

Two-Alarm Fire on Boylston Street

Boston had the second two-alarm fire on Boylston street. It resulted from an overloaded boiler in the basement of the Standard Book, No. 187 Boylston street, and caused $100,000 damage.

Chief McLaughlin arrived with the first apparatus, found a hydrant across the street frozen, and when an attempt was made to use a hydrant on Arlington street, it broke off short. Smoke seawards was issuing from the roof of the building.

The second alarm was ordered because as Chief McLaughlin declared: "I'm taking no chances. It's better to be safe than sorry."

The damage from fire was confined to some scorching timbers in the basement.

Ferrero Says Joffre Wages Humane War

Famous Italian Historian Says French Soldiers Display the Most Remarkable Self-Sacrifice in Greatest War of All Time

Finds Splendid Spirit of Patience, Optimism and Courage of the Highest Type from Officers to Humblest Man in the Ranks

(This remarkable war narrative from the pen of Guglielmo Ferrero, the eminent Italian historian, is of extraordinary interest in view of the fact that he has been at the front by special permission of the French government. In his special articles for the Sunday American he tells vividly a story of actual conditions on the firing line of a battle whose magnitude is unequalled in history.)

By GUGLIELMO FERRERO. Special Cable to New York American. Copyright, 1914, by New York American.

PARIS, Dec. 26.—At the beginning of the war the Italian press described the French soldiers as badly dressed and badly equipped. I do not know whether the descriptions were accurate, but things certainly are different now. One of the things which struck me in most of the trenches was the good condition of the soldiers. Their clothes and uniforms, of course, are no longer bright and new, but they are not dirty or worn out.

On seeing them one immediately realizes that the soldier is well supplied by a farseeing, attentive administration.

The variety of uniforms is another striking fact. As the war proceeds and the times become shabby they are replaced by new ones of different and less visible color. Khaki trousers are gradually replacing the legendary red pants, thus making the soldiers less visible. Also, it is said, because the red cloth is not available since it has become impossible to import dye from Germany.

A new gray blue attire is also gradually being adopted, with the result that the appearance of the officers and men is exceedingly variegated, as some have old uniforms, some new ones and other nondescript.

People who still have ideas of 1848 may see in this diversity a sign of disorder. The uniformity of attire of the armies of old was the symbol and instrument of discipline, but today discipline among the armies of civilized people has deeper and more ideal roots. It is not the time, but the patriotic sentiment that unites all hearts and makes individuals easily accountable to the will of officers.

Because the salvation of France is at stake, French soldiers with their unorthodox uniforms are gallily undergoing fatigues of a war which seems to be difficult far beyond my forecast.

On the other hand, the general staff is doing everything possible to minimize the hardships.

MEALS SERVED PUNCTUALLY.

It is well known that with the exception of the very first days, when there existed some inevitable confusion, all the commissariat service has worked well with the French army, and as time goes on it is becoming more perfect. The soldiers' meals, unless battle is on, arrive punctually twice a day at the trenches from nearby villages where the field kitchens are installed.

Food is plentiful, nourishing and appetizing. One look at the soldiers is enough to show they are well fed. Wine and coffee are distributed to them daily.

Two things only are scarce in the trenches—tobacco and newspapers. The military administration sends tobacco as far as possible, but all the roads behind are occupied by ammunition convoys, Red Cross, etc., tobacco naturally must be sacrificed.

Many soldiers, however, are privately provided with smokeables, and what they most regret is the lack of newspapers. One has to go to the trenches to understand how the newspaper has become a necessity to the modern man. The military authorities gather as many papers as possible, even old ones, for distribution among the soldiers, but never enough.

When I went to the front a staff officer who accompanied me filled the automobile with great bundles of papers, which he distributed all along the road. They were days old, and many sawed weeks old, but that didn't seem to matter as long as they contained some news of the world the soldiers had left behind.

BERLIN TELLS OF ATTACK BY SEA AND AIR

Wireless to Sayville, L. I., Gives Details of Bomb Dropping from Aeroplanes on Cuxhaven, Naval Base for Hamburg and Canal

NEW YORK, Dec. 27.—British warships and hydroplanes combined in a daring raid on Germany's coast on Christmas Day, according to an official statement today by the Berlin press bureau.

The news became known publicly tonight for the first time through the medium of a German wireless via Sayville, L. I.

German warships and hydroplanes engaged the foe, according to the report, which made a dash into a German bay. The name of the bay was not given but the report indicates that it was the principal location on the North Sea coast.

Boats were dropped from the British hydroplanes on anchored ships and on the gas works at Cuxhaven, the great German North Sea base, but without doing any damage, the German report says.

CONVOYED BY FLEET.

The hydroplanes were convoyed by British warships, which advanced "against the mouths of the German rivers." The British, who fired at the report says, withdrew in an easterly direction. The report also adds:

"German airships and aeroplanes reconnoitered against the British forces and hit by bombs two British destroyers and one convoy. A fire broke out on the latter."

" Fog prevented continuation of the fighting."

NO WORD FROM LONDON.

The only information received from any source regarding the raid comes from Berlin in the wireless message to Sayville. The British Admiralty evidently has made no announcement on the subject and if the news of the raid is known in English newspaper offices, the censor has prevented its transmission to this country.

There is considerable obscurity about some of the features of the raid owing partly to apparent errors in the transmission of the wireless raid message. The text of the first sentence as it was received at Sayville is:

"Admiralty reports 26-12 on 25-12 light British ships made dash into German bay."

The operator at Sayville insists that this is the sentence exactly as he received it.

"Filled up" in the usual way of filling out skeleton cable messages the sentence would read:

"The Admiralty reports on 26-12 on 25-12 light British ships made dash into German bay."

MISS AMY OWELL LORDS U.S. SWEETS

Harvard President's Sister Says Attitude of Public Is "Simply Abominable."

Miss Amy Lowell, herself a poet and sister of the president of Harvard University, spoke up for all poets when she said yesterday in the Twentieth Century Club yesterday:

"She said the attitude of the public to the poet is 'simply abominable.' She complained that a poet could only get $25 for a short poem of excellence, whereas an opera singer receives $250 for a short opera of the same length."

She urged some central city to accept poets, which poets may accept, and under with one another. In this connection she suggested that central poets should be started in New York, Chicago and the South, and West.

"WHY WHISTLE FOR IT?" So said an intelligent criticism of poetry age, Miss Lowell declared "we may whistle for it."

Robert H. Shaver told the Twentieth Century members there should be a "fresh air fund" for poets. Miss Lowell said in part:

"I am not sure that American poets have any more to say than the poets that have inspired the world. Whistling and Poets."

"We have paid so much attention to commercialism in this country as to not watching the flow of art. People will go to a symphony concert and enjoy it. They don't pretend to criticize it, because they do not feel equal to the task, but when it comes to poetry they feel competent to criticize."

"Hard work is necessary to the poet. He must do something to express himself. He must learn to write by himself. It is hard work not for a few hours, but for a lifetime. Some poets, but at all hours."

"EVERYWHERE we find a lack of good criticism. It is not here. We may whistle for it all we please. It will not come. The poet of today needs courage and courage. The crop of poets is improving. When we can get away from commercialism, we may be able to give more head-land to poetry."

Robert H. Shaver thought that poets should be given a place in the country. The city will give him inspiration. The dawn of a great literature is near at hand."

POLICE CLEW IN JEWELER'S DEATH LEADS TO BOSTON

Maurice Albertson, Found Dead in Wakefield Shack, Lived in Dread of Attack.

The State and Wakefield police at work on the murder of Maurice A. Albertson, the Lawrence Jeweler, whose body was found in a Wakefield shack, said last night that Blush Palmer, a man whom they wish to question in connection with the case, would be located within a short time. He has been traced to the North End in Boston, and search is in progress there.

Meanwhile, pawnshops are being visited for any articles of jewelry stolen from Albertson. As a precaution when he was killed, departing from the pawnshops, Albertson is believed to have been carrying a small pistol. Maurice Albertson, No. 25 Columbia Road, Wakefield, was yesterday held without bail on a charge of murder in connection with Albertson's death. He attempted to speak in his own defense, but Judge Bruce refused to hear him till he had engaged counsel.

It was learned yesterday that Albertson appeared to live in constant fear of robbery or death. As a precaution he always telephoned to his partner in Lawrence, where he was planning to go, and often sent these messages several times in the course of a single selling trip.

When Albertson came to Wakefield he telephoned his partner that he was going to Wakefield. When he finished his work there he telephoned his partner he was going to Wakefield. When he finished his work there he telephoned his partner he was going to Wakefield.

I shall make every effort possible to have my bill, now pending before the House Immigration Committee, reported out before we adjourn. It is practically impossible to obtain action by Congress during the short session, but a report from the committee would expedite business in the coming Congress, although it must be started through again as a new bill. NEW ENGLAND TO SEND $500,000 RELIEF CARGO TO THE BELGIANS

Steamer Harpalycce to Sail This Week with First Load of Food and Clothing.

With 4,000 tons of foodstuffs and clothing worth $500,000 on board the Belgian relief steamer Harpalycce will sail from the Commonwealth Dock, Pier 5, next Thursday with New England's first contribution towards the relief of suffering Belgium.

The food and clothing represent not only Boston's generosity, but that of people all over the New England States, from northern Maine to southern Connecticut. Not only have the local and charitable organizations and society women contributed to the gift fund, but thousands of individuals in every walk of life have given each his or her mite to swell the grand total.

"I am giving you a dollar, Mr. Fisher," a man of about thirty told the organization manager at the Belgian relief fund headquarters, No. 424 Boylston street, last week. "It means that I will have to go without lunch for the next four days, but I want to do my share."

From one-dollar gifts to contributions of hundreds of dollars, represented by the cartons of potatoes, sugar, cotton and other foodstuffs or clothing, the relief fund has been growing.

In addition to the shipment that goes this week supplies for another shipment to be sent the last of January are already pouring in at the New England fund headquarters.

Between $200,000 and $400,000 worth of what is en route to Boston, and a portion of which will be shipped Thursday. More will go on the second load.

Belgium, if ever, in the history of New England, and particularly of Boston, have women so unanimously and so generously contributed money and personal effort for such a cause.

The Boston headquarters, which occupy the entire street floor at No. 424 Boylston street and for which no rental is charged, present a daily scene of activity seldom equaled.

The work of sorting and inspecting the clothing is in charge of Mrs. Charles A. Porter and about forty Boston social women give certain hours on certain days to the work. Mrs. Lara Anderson, the Boston and Brookline society leader, performs her share of the work. Also through her personal solicitation "Reddy Bros., S. S. Pierce, J. Gilbert & Sons and F. H. Thomas, grocers, and the Liggett Drug Company, contributed doubly supplies for the headquarters windows. The Liggett display bears the announcement that all drugs shown are on sale for the Belgian relief fund at cost at any of its stores.

Other women helping in the work are Mrs. Everett Tuckerman, Mrs. Paul Revere Frothingham, Mrs. Helen I. Jones and Miss Louise Jones. Mrs. Sullivan Regent, Mrs. George Howland Stoddard, Mrs. Arthur Ware, Mrs. Robert P. Clark, Mrs. James Marsh Jackson, Mrs. Paul Hubbard, Miss Elizabeth Seabury, Mrs. Sias, Mrs. C. S. Rocker, Mrs. Julia Fairbank, Miss Yvonne Stoddard, Mrs. Frank E.

Sherburne and Miss Elyn Edwards. The girls of Simmons College have pledged themselves to knit for the cause and are turning out hundreds of mittens.

Contributions, instead of falling off, are increasing daily. Mr. Fisher has received word that twenty-two cartons of potatoes contributed by citizens of Ansonia, Conn., have been shipped to the Commonwealth pier dock from Caribon. Contributions from cities and towns are constantly arriving. Springfield sent 180 barrels of flour and 5,000 pounds of bacon. Holyoke sent an unusual ly large assortment of foodstuffs and clothing. An anonymous contributor sent 200 pairs of wooden socks. Another person sent twenty-five pounds of yarn for the knitters at headquarters. Cobb, Bates & Terry found two cases of cigars. J. A. Davis of Springfield, Vt., three dozen pairs of mittens. An East Boston man telephoned that a barrel of flour would be sent to the dock as his contribution. Augusta, Me., notified Mr. Fisher that a ton of sugar had been contributed by citizens of Aroostook; the E. C. Johnson company contributed fifty coils of jam and a number of bags of pea beans. The Boylston street headquarters, where the society women of the city congregate to work for the fund, are typical of similar gathering places of Belgian relief workers. North Shore society women are making rough flannel shirts for men and under-shirts for women by the hundred. The materials were given to bolts by Lawrence mill owner. A host of fashionable women have voluntarily turned solicitors for the fund and are raising thousands of dollars among their wealthy friends.

Wellesley College girls are banded together in a relief corps and are knitting heavy shawls for Belgian peasant women. A Harvard man who invited his sweetheart to a Sunday dinner at Natick had to carry the yarn and needles.

Two South square rowdies gave $10 to all they took saved. For the little Belgian fellows sent last their homes. The women of the fashionable Congregational Church at Essex and Newbury streets devote their mornings to sewing garments for the Belgian women and girls. Many entertainments are being arranged to further swell the fund. The Promenade Casino (Belgian Fair) in Horticultural Hall on January 29, 30, 31 and 32, will reproduce the Belgian city of Louvain, one of the towns destroyed by German siege guns. How and Walker, the sculptor, will oversee the reproduction. Miss Irvingston Platt will design and construct scenery showing the approach to a Belgian town during the war.

$2,000 HANDBAG THIEF IS HUNTED

Believe Man Who Robbed G.M. Might Have Been Former Employee.

The Boston police made a vigorous search yesterday for the daring thief who snatched a handbag containing $2,000 from Miss Mary Murphy of the Franklin Square Hotel, who is employed by the Third Insurance Company. The robbery took place at 10 o'clock when there were scores of people on the street.

Miss Murphy gave the police this description of the thief: Five feet seven inches tall, slender build, and wearing blue overalls and a blue sweater.

This description was furnished to seven patrolmen on the force. The authorities said the robbery might have been committed by a former employee of the company who knew of Miss Murphy's custom of taking money in and from the Beacon Trust Company.

The money was for the company's payroll and for Christmas gifts to its employees.

CHECK-FILIPINO REVOLT PLOT BY EIGHT ARRESTS

Charge of Sedition Made Against Manila Suspects; More Arrests Expected.

MANILA, Dec. 25.—Eight Filipinos have been arrested on the charge of sedition as a result of an elaborate plot in Manila and its environs. Further arrests are probable. The arrested persons are members of the secret societies discussed in plans for an uprising, thus ending a form of revolutionary and other to disperse gatherings at Rizal, Manila, and Navotas, near Manila.

The situation is stated to be well hand, but it is said that a conspiracy aimed to have the plot spread throughout the Philippines. At present the revolt was quelled by a force from Manila. Points have not been received, but it is said that the revolt was between the Philippines and Americans at several towns from Manila.

The plot was revealed by members of the Philippine constabulary force, who had secured admission to the organization which was organizing a conspiracy.

O'Hearn Spoils City Club Opening on New Year's Eve

Building Commissioner O'Hearn has held the plans for the new city club on New Year's Eve. The announcement was made last night.

Accordingly the new clubhouse will be open on New Year's Eve and the gala inaugural will be held instead in the old building. It appears that at least two more weeks will be necessary to prepare the new clubhouse for use.

The fact that the assembly hall is to be used for the new clubhouse increases the fire hazard, but the club has not yet asked a license to hold its meetings in the hall. The ordinance requires that from any assembly hall or theatre there must be two exits direct to the ground. That is, two outside fire escapes. There are none at the clubhouse.

Leaders of State, Church, Finance and Industry Unite in Demand for Peace

Pope Benedict, who has exerted every influence of the Vatican for peace, and world famous men who have given their views on a possible termination of the European war.

SPEAKER CHAMP CLARK—CARDINAL O'CONNELL

VIEWS OF NOTED MEN VARY AS TO LENGTH OF TITANIC STRUGGLE

Decisive Victory on Either Side Would Be Strong Step Toward Sane Discussion of Terms.

Leaders of thought in America favor peace in Europe. They are not in accord as to the length of the war, but the great majority, when asked for an expression, declared their deepest interest in seeing peace restored.

Political leaders in Washington are widely at variance. Some in the proposed terms of Austria, as outlined in the news, an opening for negotiations. The report from Washington that Germany and Russia were unofficially talking terms of peace adds many to hope for an early termination of the devastating conflict.

Churchmen, educators, diplomats and others express great desire for an adjustment of the difficulties that cause blood to be shed throughout Europe. Opinions as to the length of the war vary from a few months to several years.

CARDINAL O'CONNELL, of Boston, in a recent interview for the Sunday American said:

History records many such painful interventions on the part of the Holy See in times of war, with the result that even a temporary truce has been of enormous influence in cooling the overheated passions of belligerents and paving the way to a more realistic peace.

The whole world is longing for some incident of a high moral order which will be the beginning of a calmer frame of mind. For the world, even a religious war is heartily tired of this war. Anything which can end immediately and a halt to it would be welcome on all sides.

I cannot believe that if the proposal has been made it will be ruthlessly rejected by anyone; and I pray God that the ruling powers of these sadly and anxiously tried people may put aside all personal influence and successful plans which would prevent their bearing the voice of Christ calling once more the warring nations to be still.

GOVERNOR ARTHUR F. FORTY, of Rhode Island:

We all have a deep interest for the peace of the world and for the sake of the human race, I believe that the war must be determined. Mr. Hearst deserves great credit for his activity in attempting to bring about peace and who are supported by everybody.

THE RIGHT REVEREND BISHOP H. H. REED, Bishop of the Prelature of the Christian Church in the New York diocese, said:

I think the prospect for peace is very poor. But I think also that if the Christian Church throughout the entire world would take the stand it ought to take in this and other nations, the war would stop.

BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS:

I don't think there are any possibilities of peace, and I don't see how there can be until some more decisive results are reached regarding the exhaust taught people in three months more than we could have learned in years. It has created an almost universal sentiment in this country that a war, his enlightenment, is a more important of the world's interests and has inspired a desire to assist in the establishment of that peace. Early peace will confirm many of the principles of justice which we have fought during the war.

PROFESSOR J. J. HENSON, of the University of Missouri, who is lecturing for the Massachusetts Peace Society:

We are interested in peace with all our hearts. If it is to be a real peace, it must be a peace that will not be a mere truce, but a peace that will be a permanent peace.

GOVERNOR JOHN D. LEE, of Massachusetts:

I do not think the war will last three years. It is a war of hope and fervent wish that the war may be brought to a speedy close.

DR. EDWIN D. HEAD, of the World Peace Foundation:

I believe that by reason of this awful crisis in Europe there is a vast majority more in the world today than ever before who are ready to accept the idea of peace.

GOVERNOR JOHN Q. A. BRACKETT, of Massachusetts:

I should be glad to see peace restored and hope that the war will be ended as soon as possible.

PROFESSOR CHARLES F. SMITH, lecturer, writer, and editor of the well-known Atlantic:

I believe that the Christian civilization is now for the first time in its history, is being given a chance to prove its worth.

"The Gateway of All Nations"

One of three panels painted by W. de Leftwich Dodge to adorn the great arch of the Tower Gate, through which the Court of the Universe is entered from the south. It measures ninety-six feet in length and twelve feet high. The panels on either side are entitled "Labor Crowned" and "Achievement." The color scheme of this, as well as of all the other mural decorations, was chosen with a view to its effectiveness both by night and by day.

GIGANTIC MURAL PAINTINGS AT THE PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION

"Discovery"

One of another series of three panels symbolizing the Pacific Coast painted by W. de Leftwich Dodge.

"Conquest of the Pacific Coast"

In this colossal mural painting by Frank Vincent Du Mond a youth is seen bidding farewell to his snow-bound Eastern home to follow the lure of plenty and adventure.

ONE of the most notable triumphs of the great Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco promises to be its color scheme. Instead of the rather cold whiteness which characterized the exhibitions at Chicago and St. Louis, visitors to the one at San Francisco will find a magnificent symphony of loveliness, in which all the colors of the rainbow have been picked up and combined, blended and contrasted, in one harmonious whole.

Jules Guerin is the composer of this color symphony. As chief of the exposition's department of color and decoration he has been working on it unceasingly for two years. The result is miles of avenues and buildings in which are reproduced on a massive scale all the beautiful pastel tones which characterize Mr. Guerin's own pictures.

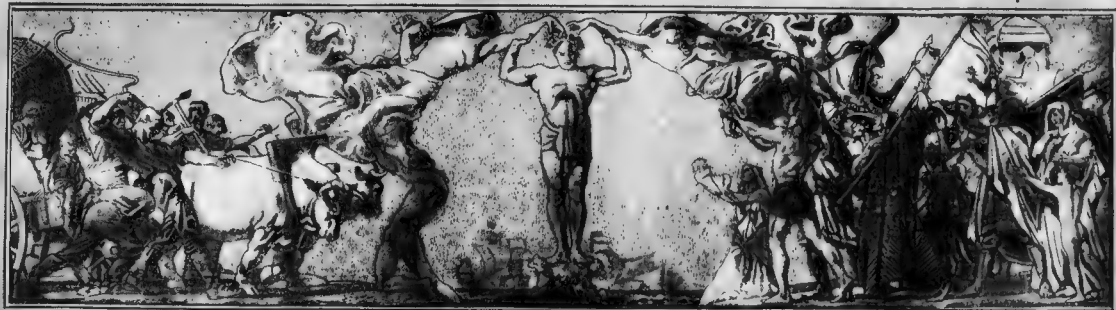

At many exhibitions the artistic effect of much that was beautiful by day was utterly ruined under the glare of light, and vice versa. But at San Francisco the genius of Mr. Guerin and other master artists has skillfully overcome this difficulty.

The official colors as devised by Mr. Guerin are burnt orange, cerulean blue and a characteristic light vermilion. All of these are as effective by night as by day, especially with the improved lighting system which the exposition has adopted. All the lighting will be indirect—clear light to see by, but no dazzling lights to be seen and to spoil the effect.

In the color scheme which has been so carefully worked out mural paintings play an important part. These are all of a colossal size seldom before attempted, and are the work of many of the greatest living artists.

But the fact that the mural decorations are the work of many different artists has not been allowed to introduce any jarring notes into the color scheme. They have all been worked out as integral parts of the whole.

This was accomplished by granting to each artist a range of five colors, and requiring him to paint his picture entirely in this key. The result is harmony instead of discord, for each man's work, although different in style of execution, is related by color to the work of every other man.

"ATLANTIC
and
PACIFIC"

The union of the two oceans through the Panama Canal is the theme of this magnificent painting by Mr. Dodge. It will be seen on the Tower Gate between two panels by the same artist entitled "Discovery" and "Purchase."

the arguments showing why European noblemen do well to marry chorus girls. They point out the benefits to the lord, not the chorus girl. But, fortunately, lords are few and growing fewer, while chorus girls are becoming more numerous every year.¹ The chorus girl, therefore, is a more profitable investment. Ten million roubles are preferable to four as husbands for chorus girls.² In the case what that writer said for the chorus girl is raw material for matrimonial development, which is equally well. Here are his very words:

"A chorus girl's beauty and charm—without which she cannot be a chorus girl—are among the least of the considerations for the posthumous benefit of her family. The girl who is beautiful would not have survived—she would have been the first to be married. It is the lack of a hopeful disposition or a want to have herself dismissed which allows her to stay in the chorus."

the's rashing of wild mushrooms for their dinner.

In the argot of the day these meddles are many and always on the job. My grandmother, for instance, is a grandma, pretty far places them in the order of their activities as home spoilers, and the reason of their of their conduct is that "papa" and "mamma" are not to be knowning neither justice nor mercy. These "know-it-alls," these "boss-i-alls," try to deceive themselves by trying on the "Mamma" and "Papa" and then explain that they "just offer a little advice" or gentle admonition to the door young ignorant things in order to start them properly.

Nothing! When young animals are born and seek a new life Tiger Mamma doesn't come aunting about to tell them that they are "too fat" or "too thin." Very young birds learn and build their nests, and no feathered mother, real or imaginary, comes to tell them that they are "clumsy" or "inadequate" or "in need of advice." All these young things are left to do it alone. It is only in humans that this kind of "mothering" and "fathering" is supposed to be in life, according to the theory.

The most truly arid year in life is the first year of marriage. It may prove to be a year of "happy" and "prosperous" or secretly tragic. But every and always, it must be trying! "Pittals" are none the less inevitable. They are the "little things" which leave. But if (except all-and-fall day) you can't get away from them, you must strain nerves, snap and snap they will. You must "make good" and "make over" and "make new" and "make over" and "make over" again, if they are to give you a not uninteresting friend to advise and a not uninteresting life to live. If you are wrong, never give in to a man or to a woman. You must stand up for your rights and to him: "You want to be master now, right from the start. Well, suppose I am a master. Don't you want to be a mistress or you'll find your sure," etc., etc., etc.

As such a record of broken vows, hearts and homes would at least prove what a roll in life is made by the "little things," it is perhaps public opinion, if not the law, might make us a parade definition, how the "little things" are to be handled. The married life is to be one of the most prohibited from entering the home during the day.

Then there is the labor, ingrained respect for the mother, the child's feelings for a mother. The affection, instinctive and cultivated, tinged with gratitude, the child's love for his mother, daughter to hold out in stern opposition against her—even when she knows, her knowledge of her mother's faults, her peace. Add to these her real knowledge of housekeeping, and then set all this over against the child's ignorance of his wife's character, and tell me what chance the woman has.

It is much harder for a man to set his face like a flint against his wife's mother than it is for a woman to set her face against her mother. The mother of them has first informed and wife that she can afford to possess things called damp and is a valuable asset at times or some like service.

"Jack" Cudahy's Latest Outbreak

Fresh Warning to
"Peace Makers" in the Unfortunate Experiences of a Well Meaning Doctor and His Wife with the High-Spirited Young Millionaire Who "Cut Up" Banker Lillis

"Jack" Cudahy, the Strenuous Son of Michael Cudahy, the Stock Yard Magnate, Who Has "at Last Been Whipped."

"HANDSOME JACK" CUDAHY is the youngest son of the late Michael Cudahy, one of his family, consisting of a beautiful wife and four charming children, and dwelling with them in the soft and soothing climate of California, has "broken out" again.

This fresh outbreak, of which the scene was the Cudahys' handsome bungalow in Pasadena, Cal., revealed several of the features which marked the extraordinary events in Jack Cudahy's Kansas City residence four years ago, of which banker Jere S. Lillis was the victim. It is to be remembered that Cudahy, aided by his chauffeur, tied up Banker Lillis with ropes and slashed him with a sharp knife, so that he had to be taken to a hospital.

In the Pasadena affair it was Cudahy who got tied up with ropes—but not until he had decorated two ribs of the whip, it is charged, of the other party in the affair.

There are other differences. In connection with the Lillis affair Mr. Cudahy broke one of his wife's ribs, merely blackening her eyes and bruising her somewhat. Yet she divorced him. But in the present instance, although she called for help to subdue Mr. Cudahy, after "handsome Jack" had been subdued she promises that her husband shall yet subdue the subduer—thus bearing out the ancient axiom that any one who protects a wife against her husband, even though she cry for help, is bound to get the worst of it.

These details, most of them, are revealed in the papers in a suit brought by Dr. J. O. Coates and Edith Ellen Coates, his wife, against Cudahy for $100,000 damages on account of the above-mentioned injuries to Mrs. Coates.

Dr. Coates, who has ceased being the Pasadena family physician since the night of the disturbance, declares that Mrs. Cudahy called him on the telephone. She said, quoting Dr. Coates, "that Jack was over at the Athletic Club on a spree, and he wanted me to go over with her and get him down."

Right then things began to happen. Cudahy was calling for his wife, and when she appeared he ordered her away. Dr. Coates tried nonviolent methods and cut his hand, and then he was ordered out of the house. Just then Cudahy saw Palmer Day, a small man wearing his head in a white towel, and he called him to the door. Cudahy said he was not a doctor, but he would fight him. Cudahy said he was not a doctor, but he would fight him.

Cudahy said he was not a doctor, but he would fight him.

"Sure, the doctor trounced me," was Cudahy's frank admission. "I may take another try at him some of these days. I am not convinced he is the better man."

Yet a suit for damages showed that the Cudahys are indeed truly routed. Mr. Cudahy said:

"I am awfully sorry for Mrs. Coates, but she ought to have known better than interfere when two men get in a fight. No woman who is a good sport would do so."

"Handsomeness Jack" Cudahy's enormous enthusiasm for the material joys of life has always surrounded him with more friends and boon companions than his periodic fits of violence could insure for him. To most of these, including his wife, he is known as a strange mixture of the winning sentimentalist and the roaring egotist. In 1910 a widely circulated society journal printed this about him:

"Although one of the handsomest men in the West, big, black-haired and gray-eyed—Cudahy has long had an insatiable appetite for drink."

He has taken the Keely cure not less than seven different times. He has been cured of his drinking habit, but he has never been able to keep it. He has been cured of his drinking habit, but he has never been able to keep it.

This was published shortly after that son of a gun, Cudahy, had been in the drawing room of his own house into a midnight toilet chamber, with a Kansas City lawyer for the victim.

This shocking affair, with its various ramifications and its sequel, pretty thoroughly illuminates the many added elements of Jack Cudahy. In the first place, he is the son of Michael Cudahy, founder of the great Cudahy packing business in Chicago, and he is a man of great wealth.

He is a man of great wealth, and he is a man of great wealth. He is a man of great wealth, and he is a man of great wealth. He is a man of great wealth, and he is a man of great wealth.

and duster on, as though just arrived from a trip with his machine.

At first he said: "Please don't do it." The policeman interfered demanding the making of a statement.

Why the Longer You Sleep, the Longer You Live

THAT sleep is the key to the time-value of life, indeed the most vital factor in long life, is the gist of a record of experiments just completed by Professor Carl Ludwig Schleich. Professor Schleich is one of the most eminent surgeons and medical authorities in the United States.

Eight hours work, eight hours play, eight hours sleep, he believes, is the ideal. It should be at least ten and probably twelve hours sleep and four to six hours work.

He also advises "gymnastics of the blood vessels." During the daylight hours of activity, muscular movements, and work of all the non-sleeping tissues, two processes take place which have a beneficial association with the heart and the blood.

One of these is the perfusion of the blood by the heart, and the other is the perfusion of the blood by the heart. One of these is the perfusion of the blood by the heart, and the other is the perfusion of the blood by the heart.

Physical culture of the arteries and veins is carried out in this fashion. The arteries are more circular and less flat than the veins, and they are "worked" as far as possible, with the result that they are more elastic and more resistant.

Hiding Belgium's Priceless Paintings Under Rivers

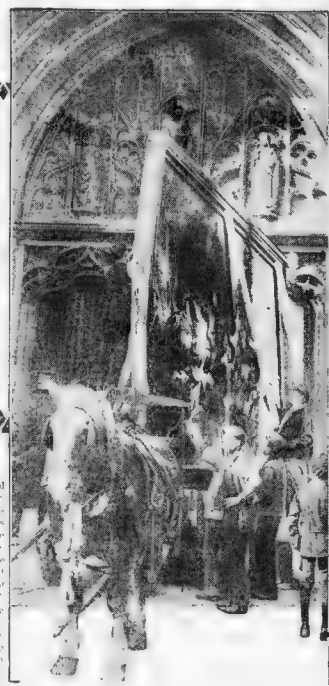

How Millions of Dollars Worth of Art Treasures Have Been Securely and Secretly Sunk Beneath the Waters of the War-Torn Little Kingdom to Save Them from the Germans

THE BELGIAN GOVERNMENT has taken the most drastic and effective step yet taken in the history of the world to protect its art treasures from the hands of the enemy. It has secretly sunk beneath the waters of the Scheldt, a river which flows into the North Sea, a large number of the most valuable paintings in the collection of the Belgian government. The paintings, which are worth millions of dollars, are being hidden from the Germans in a metal tube which is being lowered into the river. The paintings are being hidden in a metal tube which is being lowered into the river. The paintings are being hidden in a metal tube which is being lowered into the river.

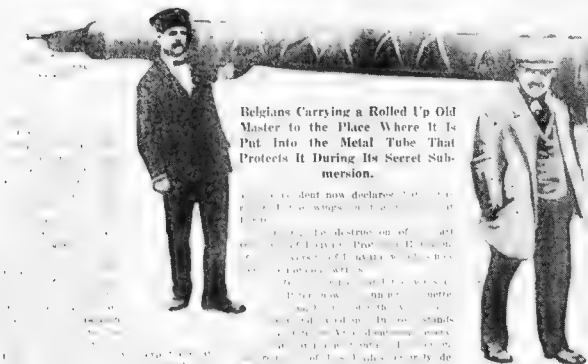

"Trusted Belgian officers carried out the painting. Secretly and with the utmost caution it was lowered in its hermetically sealed tube down to the bed of the river. Its exact location is known to few. Thus ended the last scene in the tragedy of the priceless Rubens 'The Descent From the Cross.' It lies under the waters of the Scheldt, safe from alien hands—conceivably even lost forever to the world."

Why the Moon's Horns Have Nothing to Do with the Weather

Yet it is a fact, which everybody who has looked at the sky at night has noticed, that the moon's horns have nothing to do with the weather. The moon's horns are a natural phenomenon, and they are not caused by the weather.

Since however the moon is a ball, it has a horizon, and the horns are the part of the moon which is above the horizon. The horns are a natural phenomenon, and they are not caused by the weather.

FIREWORKS for the Hair Coats of Mail for Gowns.

By Lady Duff-Gordon
("Lucile")

HERE is no doubt now that, for this coming season at least, all your new models must be of American creation. Your beloved lady "imported" will no longer be a recommendation for the gown or hat they which it is attached.

And why not? I'll tell you a secret. I know many goods—not necessarily dresses—but that for years have been labelled "imported"—and yet they never saw the sea!

But one word of warning. It does not follow that because America will create the new season's fashions, any American who launches a new idea can take upon herself to say that her creation is the new and particularly note for the coming season any more than any French woman in Paris can do the same thing unless she has a reputation behind her for unerring judgment in what is good.

Being young, you must experiment and await the survival of the fittest that you wear at your dress—your new gown and your opera. At such places, as in Paris, the top comes to the top, and is universally taken up. Just think of the hopeless chaos of a leading New York dressmaker, each earnestly insisting that he or she has the real and only style which is to prevail this season.

One lady to speak an "ill wind" at such a time as this, but that's the blowing the close of the war may quietly settle Paris, London and all the rest of our busy buying their models for Europe. Why know?

And now to the photographs which give you glimpses of new things that are newest and best to-day.

First, there is what some are pleased to call a "fireworks" headpiece. The hair, as you will notice, is down well back. A most unusual "Catherine wheel" of paradise bursts from the forehead, where it is held in place by a band of sapphires.

Unfortunately the photograph shows only a wee bit of the magnificent brocade and lace dinner gown with which this hat is worn. But later on I shall hope to picture it for you, because it is a dress every woman will admire and wish she might own.

Brocade is also the material used in the dainty tea coat shown on the other side of this page. The model is Russian in design, and wears in shades of gold tissue, violet and green. The transparent front is of blue chiffon bordered with sable and full dress you have a very effective type, but one that is, of course, suitable only for large women. The combination of an aluminum "coat of mail" with a Greek bodice of black and diamonds and an overdress of black velvet, which suggests an old scholastic gown, is quite unusual.

The headpiece is of wings arranged from the back and crossing in the front with two upstanding ends.

It would seem that daintiness rather than display is the note of the season's jewelry designs, the pioneers of the change of device being finest crystal hand-carved with tiny figures of graceful dancing Cupids, or equally diminutive and graceful, but more positively posed nymfs.

These pendants are of various shapes—square, oval, octagonal or round—and they are encrusted in little softly shimmering pearls and shining diamonds, with, perhaps, a pale star-sapphire introduced here and there, though the effect is really lost when only the three subtly different degrees of whiteness are represented and contrasted—first the cool clearness of the crystal, then the milky, satiny sheen of the pearls, and finally the fiery flashes of the diamonds.

ried with blue and violet bands. The under dress is entirely of lace.

Another charming tea gown which I think you will like is entirely of cheville in the softest oyster shades. It is faced and piped with very pale green satin, the chiffon inside being of flesh color bound with satin.

Nothing could be drier than the little cap which accompanies this gown. It is of lace and flowers, with a chin strip.

In the semi-classical

Always, however, it is almost needless to say, the setting is of the platinum, which has now so completely ousted gold from its original position and prominence.

Sometimes the pendants will be attached to a slender, almost invisible chain of platinum, but they look even more strikingly uncommon when they hang from a fine black silk cord, and are further finished off with a soft silken tassel, their white brilliance and beauty showing up wonderfully well between these two telling touches of black.

Roudest of all this there is something almost daring as well as very distinctive in their unexpected breaking away from what has become an accepted and, it might have been thought, an unalterable tradition, and the real elegance will assuredly be appreciative of this chance to wear something different, and to score a triumph by simplicity in stead of splendor.

For some other lucky woman, too, there waits a pendant in the form of a tassel, the upper curves formed of pearls, while the actual tassel part is formed of countless shimmering, awaying strands of platinum chain, as fine as silk. Pretty, is it not?

Imagine, too, a crown ornament in the form of a widely looped bow of crystal, so cleverly carved that it takes all the folds and apparently the suppleness of silken ribbon. And while two of its loops are edged with diamonds, the others are bordered with pearls, so that you get a wonderful play of light and delicately different shadings on its shimmering, ever-changing surface.

By the way, the watch bracelet is now more than ever a necessity of fashion, as well as convenience, and though many are—and will be—still made with an expanding bracelet of platinum, the real chic of the coming, as well as the past season, is the tiny square shaped watch of platinum and diamonds, which is set in the centre of a narrow band of black moire, stitched and buckled like an old leather wrist strap favored by the men folks.

Then of two other novelties worth noting by those who want all their possessions to be up-to-date, one is a "motor companion," made to open and shut just like the familiar roll-top deck, there being a real convenience in the arrangement, which will make as great an appeal as its novelty.

Why Science Has Blacklisted Pussy

THAT cats are the worst of friends and do mankind more harm than good is one of the latest edicts of science. The sprightly kittens and staid old tabby cats which for ages the human race has ranked among its best friends have all been placed on the blacklist along with the horses which the automobile has displaced and the dogs which New York City's Health Commissioner declares unfit for civilized communities.

According to the Biological Survey, the bureau of the Department of Agriculture, which has been investigating the claims of all sorts of animals to our consideration, the cat has been tolerated altogether too long. We have been deceived into thinking that it is a very useful creature when, as a matter of fact, it is doing all that any animal could, and more than most animals do, to destroy our health, wealth and happiness.

The cat's case has been decided only after the most careful deliberation. Arguments for and against the creature have been heard, but after weighing them all the court of science gives the cat the most unsparring condemnation any animal has yet received.

One of the strongest counts against pussy is its unpardonable cowardice. It masquerades as the protector of the household from mice and rats. The truth is that not one cat in a hundred has the courage to attack a rat. Where rats are at all numerous they are quite as likely to run the cats out of the house as the opposite thing to happen.

Mice are so ineffective that they might be attacked with impunity were it not for the overpowering lateness which makes the cat usually disinclined to give them battle. Dr. A. K. Fisher, one of the government's authorities on cats, recently caught twelve mice under the bed in which he slept, despite the fact that there were four cats in the household.

Cats might possibly be forgiven for not riding our homes of rats and mice, but there is nothing to excuse their slaughter of chickens and young birds, of whose flesh they are inordinately fond. Larks, robins and all the other little feathered creatures which add so much to the beauty of our city parks and country lanes would be far more plentiful if they were not being constantly slaughtered by the treacherous cat. Cats are too cowardly and lazy to attack rats and mice, but they find keen delight in preying on harmless birds which are too small and weak to escape from their claws.

"Many an innocent hawk, skunk, owl or weasel," says the government bureau, "has been shot for the deeds of that sleek highwayman, the house cat. It is safe to say that this marauder, which enjoys all the comforts and protection of the home, destroys in the aggregate more wild birds and young poultry, than all their natural enemies combined."

But the government's main reason for declaring war on our feline pets is that they carry disease to the children and others that handle them. Even the most aristocratic cat enjoys roaming through all sorts of unsanitary places, and its fur makes an ideal lodging place for the germs of diphtheria, smallpox, tuberculosis and other things which it may pick up there. Ringworm is one of the lesser diseases whose prevalence is attributed to our having so many cats.

The fact that you can get hydrophobia from a cat's bite and that its scratch often causes blood poisoning gives science an additional reason for placing pussy on the blacklist.

If we must have cats, science urges that they be kept in outhouses and never allowed to have the run of our homes. Before children and others are allowed to handle cats their germ-laden coats of fur should be carefully cleaned and treated with some powerful antiseptic. But even when the cat's possibilities for spreading disease have been reduced to a minimum it is still a far less safe and satisfactory household pet than even the despised skunk would be.

CHAPTER I. The Clutching Hand

"THERE must be something new in order to catch criminals nowadays. The old methods are all right—as far as they go. But while we have been using them, criminals have kept pace with modern science."
Craig Kennedy laid down his newspaper and filled his pipe with my tobacco. In college we had roomed together, had shared everything, even poverty, and now that Craig was a professor of chemistry in charge of the laboratory at the university and I had a sort of roving commission on the staff of the Star, we had continued our arrangement. Prosperity found us in a rather neat bachelor apartment on the Heights, not far from the university.

"It has always seemed strange to me," he went on slowly, "that no one has ever endowed a professorship in criminal science in any of the large colleges."

I tossed aside my own paper and retrieved the tobacco.

"Why should there be a chair in criminal science?" I replied argumentatively, settling back in my chair. "I've done my turn at police headquarters reporting, and I can tell you, Craig, it's no place for a college professor. Crime is—just crime.
And as for dealing with it the great detective is born and bred to it. College professors for the sociology of the thirties; for the detection of it, give me a Byrnes."

"On the contrary," persisted Kennedy, his clean-cut features betraying an earnestness which I knew indicated that he was leading up to something of importance,
"there is a distinct place for science in the detection of crime. On the Continent they are far in advance of us in that respect.
We are mere children beside a dozen crime specialists over there whom I could name."

"Yes!" I queried, rather doubtfully.
"But where does the college professor come in?"

"You must remember, Walter," he pursued, warming up to the subject which had evidently been on his mind for some time,
"that it's only within the last ten years or so that we have had the really practical college professor who could do it. The silk-stockinged variety is out of date, now.

To-day we have professors of everything—
why not professors of crime science?"

Still, as I shook my head dubiously, he hastened to clinch his point. "Colleges

The Death of Elaine's Father, Mr. Dodge, the Insurance President have got down to solving the hard facts of life, nowadays—pretty nearly all, except

one. They still treat crime in the old way, study its statistics and pore over its causes and the theories of how it can be prevented and punished. But as for running down the criminal himself, scientifically, relentlessly—bah! we haven't made enough progress to mention since the hammer and tongs method of your sainted Byrnes."

"Doubtless you will write a brochure on this most interesting subject," I suggested, "and let it go at that."

"No, I am serious," he replied, determined for some reason or other to make a convert of me. "I mean exactly what I say. I am going to apply science to the detection of crime, the same sort of methods by which we trace out the presence of a mysterious chemical or track down a deadly germ. And before I have gone far, I am going to enlist Walter Jameson as an aide. I think I shall need you in my business."

"How do I come in?" I asked.
"Well, for one thing, you will get a 'coop,' a 'beat'—whatever you call it in that newspaper jargon of yours."

Kennedy during the previous year had travelled much, especially in London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna, where he had studied the amazing growth abroad of the new criminal science. Already I knew something, by hearsay, of the men he had seen—Gross, Lacaze, Reiss and the immortal Bertillon.

"Fortunately, Walter," he pursued,
"the crime-hunters have gone ahead in science faster than the criminals. Yours, it seems to me, is to show people how they can never hope to beat the modern scientific detective."

"Go as far as you like," I exclaimed, convinced at last.

And so it was that we formed this strange new partnership in crime science that has existed ever since.

The Murder of Banker Fletcher

"JAMESON, here's a story I wish you'd follow up," remarked the managing editor of the Star to me one evening after I had turned in as assignment of the late afternoon.

He handed me a clipping from the evening edition of the Star, and I quickly ran my eye over the headline.

myself, and I was not at all surprised to find that I was not the only one who had been thinking of the same thing. I had been thinking of the same thing for some time, and I was not at all surprised to find that I was not the only one who had been thinking of the same thing. I had been thinking of the same thing for some time, and I was not at all surprised to find that I was not the only one who had been thinking of the same thing.

He looked at me for a moment, and then he said: "I am not at all surprised to find that you are not the only one who has been thinking of the same thing. I have been thinking of the same thing for some time, and I was not at all surprised to find that I was not the only one who had been thinking of the same thing."

I had naturally, of course, been thinking of the same thing, but there was no time to tell him up and, besides, I was not at all surprised to find that I was not the only one who had been thinking of the same thing.

Dodge, I was not at all surprised to find that I was not the only one who had been thinking of the same thing. I was not at all surprised to find that I was not the only one who had been thinking of the same thing. I was not at all surprised to find that I was not the only one who had been thinking of the same thing.

With some misgivings about being admitted to the ball of the splendid, though not very modern, Dodge residence. An English butler, with a face that must have been his fortune, opened the door and gravely informed me that Mr. Dodge was not at home, but very needed at any moment.

Once in, I was not going to let it slip that advantage. I both went to the room of my daughter Elaine, one of the most popular debutantes of the season, and on my card to her, on a chance of looking her and seeing her father, waiting on the bottom of the hall. "Would like to interview Mr. Dodge regarding Clutching Hand."

Summoning up what assurance I had which is sometimes considerable, I followed the butler down the hall as he bore my card. As he opened the door of the drawing room, I caught a vision of a slip of a girl in evening clothes.

Elaine Dodge was both the ingenue and the athlete, the thoroughly modern type of girl—equally at home with tennis and tango, table talk and tea. Vivacious eyes that hinted at a stunning amber brown sparkled beneath masses of the most wonderful auburn hair. Her pearly teeth, when she smiled, were marvellous. And she smiled often, for life to her seemed a continuous film of enjoyment.

Near her I recognized from his pictures Harry Bennett, the rising young corporation lawyer, a mighty good looking fellow, with an affable, pleasing way about him, perhaps thirty-five years old or so, but already prominent and quite friendly with Dodge.

On a table I saw a book, as though Elaine had cast it down when the lawyer arrived to call on the daughter under pretence of waiting for her father. It opened on the table was the Star. They had read the story.

"Who is it, Jennings?" she asked. "A reporter, Miss Dodge," answered the butler glancing superciliously back at me. "And you know how your father dislikes to see anyone here at the house," he added deferentially to her.

I took in the situation at a glance. Bennett was trying not to look discourteous, but this was a call on Elaine, and it had been interrupted. I could expect no help from that quarter. Still, I fancied that Elaine was not averse to trying to pique her visitor, and determined at least to try it.

"Miss Dodge," I pleaded, bowing as if I had known them all my life, "I've been trying to find your father all the evening. It's very important."

I was not at all surprised to find that I was not the only one who had been thinking of the same thing. occurrence that had led up to the final step in the discovery.

It was late in the evening when I returned to our apartment and, not finding Kennedy there, knew that I would discover him at the laboratory.

"Craig," I cried as I burst in on him, "I've got a case for you—greater than any ever before."

Kennedy looked up, slowly from the back of a wicker chair, and then, surrounded by test tubes, beakers, carefully labeled bottles.

He had been examining a piece of cloth, and I had it as a disappointment near his magnifying glass. Just now he was watching a reaction in a series of test tubes standing on his table. He was looking dejectedly at it.

"Indeed!" he remarked, coolly going back to the reaction.

"How long has he known?" he demanded eagerly.

"Perhaps three or four hours," I answered.

"Kennedy gazed at me fixedly.

"Then Taylor Dodge is dead?" he exclaimed, throwing off his well-stained laboratory coat, which had once been a smoking jacket, and hurrying into his street clothes.

"Impossible!" I ejaculated.

Kennedy paid no attention to the objection. "Come, Walter, he urged. "We must hurry before the trail gets cold."

There was something positively uncanny about Kennedy's assurance. I doubted yet I feared.

"Yes," I cried. "It is a scientific criminal who seems to leave no clues."

Kennedy looked up gravely. "Every criminal leaves a trace," he said quietly. "If it hasn't been found then it must be because no one has ever looked for it in the right way."

Still gazing at me keenly, he added: "Yes, I already knew there was such a man at large. I have been called in on that Fletcher case—he was a trustee of the university, you know."

"All right," I exclaimed, a little nettled that he should have anticipated me even so much in the case. "But you haven't heard the latest."

"What is it?" he asked with provoking calmness.

"Taylor Dodge," I blurted out, "has the clue. To-morrow he will track down the man!"

Kennedy fairly jumped as I repeated the news.

"How long has he known?" he demanded eagerly.

"Perhaps three or four hours," I answered.

"Kennedy gazed at me fixedly.

heavy mahogany. It was brilliantly lighted.

At one end of the desk was a telephone. Taylor Dodge was lying on the floor at that end of the desk—perfectly rigid—his face distorted—a ghastly figure. A pet dog ran over, sniffed frantically at his master's legs and suddenly began to howl dismally.

"Dodge was dead!"

"Help!" shouted Jennings.

Others of the servants came rushing in. There was, for the moment, the greatest excitement and confusion.

Suddenly a wild figure in flying garments flitted down the stairs and into the library, dropping beside the dead man, whose seeming to notice us at all.

"Father!" shrieked a woman's voice, heart broken. "Father! Oh—my God—look, he is dead!"

It was Elaine Dodge.

With a mighty effort, the heroic girl seemed to pull herself together.

"Jennings," she cried, "Call Mr. Bennett—immediately!"

From the one-sided, excited conversation of the butler over the telephone, I gathered that Bennett had been in the process of disrobing in his own apartment uptown, and would be right down.

Together, Kennedy, Elaine and myself lifted Dodge to a sofa and Elaine's aunt, Josephine, with whom she lived, appeared on the scene, trying to quiet the sobbing girl.

Kennedy and I withdrew a little way, and he looked about curiously.

Here is an opportunity for you to WIN $100.00

Here is a chance to win a good substantial sum of money and increase your knowledge of words.

Try and make out what word is represented by the Rebus printed below. Then see how many English words you can make from the Rebus. That's all there is to it.

THE PLAN

THE Rebus printed on this page represents a word of 15 letters. After you find what it is, try and find out how many words you can make from it, using only the letters that appear in the correctly spelled Rebus word. If a letter appears two times in the Rebus word, that letter can be used either once or twice in the forming of a new word, for example—if four letter b's appear in the Rebus word, you cannot use the letter "b" more than four times in any word, but you can use it either once, twice, three or four times. You cannot use any letter that is not in the properly spelled Rebus word.

An Example

Suppose the Rebus word might be American —You could get from it the words

me	are	camera	mice	ram	and a host can	man	mare	nice	came	of other
ran	mean	care	car	aim	words
mica	an	rice	mar	rain
